The first thing everyone notices about him is his height. He is tall, almost two metres. He is as thin as a rake. He looks as if he has not eaten for months and yet he is always eating. He never bothers much about his appearance, except for his hair. I joke about his looking when he gets out of bed in the morning. His short, brown hair is all spiky and sticking out. He spends hours trying to comb it flat but with no success.

He is patient and kind. He always helps me with my maths, even if it means giving up a night out with his friends. He is also calm. I've never seen him get angry once.

16. Read the passage and answer the questions.

We all like to think we are different from other people: But many of us spend a lot of time and money making sure we look the same. We want to wear clothes that are in fashion, we want to look "right". But who decides what is "right"? What is "in fashion"? Very often a film star, a TV or pop star wears something and starts a fashion. Also clothes manufacturers - the people who make clothes - decide what clothes they want people to wear next year, then make and sell millions of them to the shops. People think they have a choice, but in fact the big stars and the manufacturers choose for them.
